Customer journey diagnostic

Your journey, stage by stage

A stage-by-stage review of how your business turns attention into booked, returning clients.

Overall score

Leaking

There are significant gaps in your journey. You're winning attention and then losing people who were ready to book - which means growth is costing far more than it should.

An example of a completed report. Lumen Skin Clinic is a fictional business; every figure is produced by the real scoring model.

Before you spend more on ads

Fix the journey first. Then the ads are worth paying for.

Ads change one thing: how many people ask about you. What happens next decides how many of them become clients. If people are slipping away along the way, more ads just means more people slipping away. You pay twice - once for the ad, and again for the client you never got.

Here is what the research says about the eight stages in this report.

75%

People choose fast

of people pick a local business in under 30 minutes. More than one in four decide in under five. Most look at three businesses or fewer. Reply tomorrow and the job has gone.

71%

Hard to book means no booking of regular clients say they have given up on booking because it was too hard to reach someone or book online. They did not complain. They just went elsewhere.

a third

One text saves the slot

fewer missed appointments after one text reminder the day before: 7.5% down to 5.0%. A no-show is a client you already paid for, in time you cannot sell twice.

97%

Everyone checks you first of people read reviews before choosing a local business. More than two thirds will only use one rated 4 stars or better. Your reviews are read before your website.

What this means for a marketing budget

Say each enquiry costs you £25, and one in five becomes a client. So £1,000 buys 40 enquiries and 8 clients. Now make it one in three. The same £1,000 buys 12 clients. To get those 4 extra clients from ads alone you would spend £500 more, every month, for as long as you keep advertising. Fixing the journey is a one-off.

The cheapest clients you will ever win are the ones already in your inbox.

Executive summary

What your answers show

Leaking

Sarah Mensah, your customer journey scores 51 out of 100. There are significant gaps in your journey. You're winning attention and then losing people who were ready to book - which means growth is costing far more than it should.

Your strongest stage is Lead Sources & Discovery at 70/100. The stage costing you most right now is Lead Response at 28/100 - which is where this report starts.

At £1,000-£2,500 per client, one extra client a month adds around £19,200 in lifetime value over a year - the bar every recommendation in this report has to clear.

What the gaps are costing you	£64,800 a year
Enquiries that never became clients	£33,700
Clients who don't come back	£16,100
Appointments that don't turn up	£15,000

Your top three priorities

Priority 1

Lead Response

28/100 · Critical gap

Same-day replies mean most enquiries sit unanswered for hours, by which point many have booked elsewhere.

Priority 2

Retention & Re-engagement

46/100 · Critical gap

Only 45% of your clients are repeat, so most of your income depends on constantly finding new people.

Priority 3

Reviews & Reputation

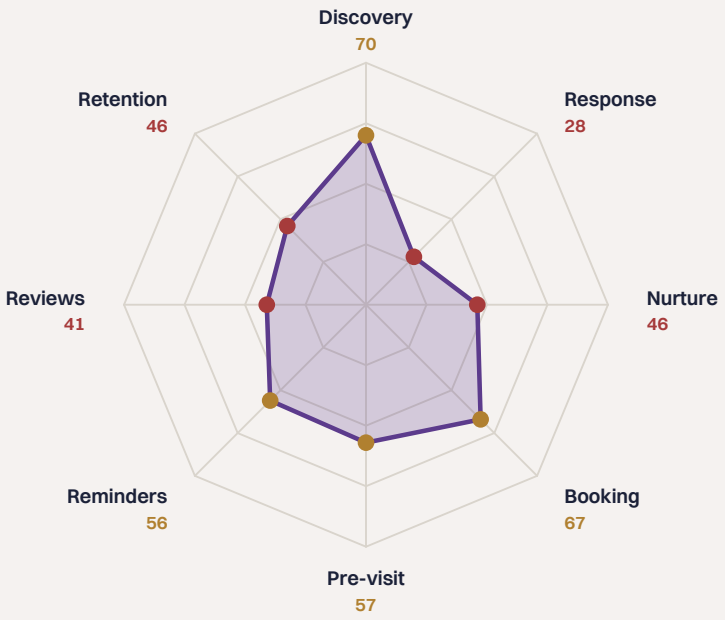

41/100 · Critical gap

Few clients act on your review request, which usually means the ask arrives too late or takes too many steps.

Your customer journey map

Where clients flow - and where they leak

Each stage is colour-coded by how well it's working. A client has to pass through every one of these to become a returning, referring regular - so the weakest stage sets the ceiling for everything after it.

Stage by stage

1	Lead Sources & Discovery	70/100 · Needs work
2	Lead Response	28/100 · Critical gap
3	Lead Nurture & Follow-Up	46/100 · Critical gap
4	Booking Process	67/100 · Needs work
5	Confirmation & Pre-Appointment	57/100 · Needs work
6	Reminders & No-Show Prevention	56/100 · Needs work
7	Reviews & Reputation	41/100 · Critical gap
8	Retention & Re-engagement	46/100 · Critical gap

What happens next

Your 90-day focus

A 90-day focus is one number you agree to move over the next three months, with three or four pieces of work that all move that same number. Three months is long enough for a change to show up in your figures and short enough to hold your attention. The point is not to fix everything at once. It is to fix one thing properly, watch it move, and then take on the next.

WHY THIS NUMBER, AND NOT ONE OF THE OTHER SEVEN

Each of the eight stages owns one number. Lead Response scored 28 out of 100, and because it carries more weight in your overall score than most, that gap is costing you more than any other single stage. So the number for this quarter is Enquiry response time. The other priorities below were not picked for being weak on their own. They were picked because the work they need also moves Enquiry response time, so Lead Nurture & Follow-Up and Booking Process pull in the same direction rather than scattering your effort across eight fronts.

What you get when it moves

Replying in minutes instead of hours wins back work you had already done the hard part for. It costs nothing once the system is in place, it runs while you are with a client, and people read a fast reply as a business that has its act together.

Not this quarter, but still a concern

These stages also scored below where they should be. They are deliberately not in the plan, because a quarter spent on everything is a quarter spent on nothing. Leave them until the number above has moved and held, then they become the next cycle.

Retention & Re-engagement Repeat client rate	46/100
Reviews & Reputation Google reviews	41/100
Reminders & No-Show Prevention No-show rate	56/100
Confirmation & Pre-Appointment First-appointment attendance	57/100
Lead Sources & Discovery New enquiries a month	70/100

Your 90-day focus

One number, three or four priorities

Everything below moves Enquiry response time. The windows add up to the whole thirteen weeks, so this is the quarter, not the first fortnight of it.

Your focus KPI

Enquiry response time

How long a new enquiry waits before it gets a useful reply

This is the first few minutes after someone contacts you, and it is the fastest-moving number in the business. A reply inside five minutes converts several times better than the same reply an hour later, because the person is still sitting there with your competitors' pages open. It costs nothing but a system.

Today

Same day

In 90 days

Under five minutes, every time, including when you're with a client

Worth roughly £33,700 a year once it moves.

The priorities in this cycle

1 Answer every enquiry within minutes, at any hour

Weeks 1-4

via Lead Response

- Switch on instant replies on Instagram and Facebook, and an automatic confirmation email on your website form. Include your prices and a booking link.
- Add an instant auto-response so the gap between clients isn't the thing your enquiries depend on.
- Write three saved replies: first enquiry, price question, and 'thinking about it'. Each one should answer the question, reassure, and end with a booking link.

2 Keep talking to the people who did not book straight away

Weeks 5-9

via Lead Nurture & Follow-Up

- Automate the first three follow-ups so they go out whether or not you have capacity that week, and keep your manual touch for the ones who reply.
- Extend your sequence to five touches across two weeks, varying the angle each time - helpful, reassuring, then time-bound.

3 Make booking effortless and always open

Weeks 10-13

via Booking Process

- Cut any field you don't need at the point of booking. Collect the rest afterwards, on the confirmation.
- Build one quote template with your standard pricing and inclusions, so a quote is an hour's work rather than an evening's.

Three things you can do this week

- Put a chatbot on every channel that answers price, availability and what's involved, and offers a booking link, so the enquiry is dealt with in seconds instead of being queued for later.
- Ask for the next booking before they leave, as well as sending the follow-up.
- Automate the same message a few hours after each appointment, while the experience is still fresh.

Then the next cycle

Repeat client rate - Retention & Re-engagement

Measuring the change

How you'll know it's working

Three numbers, checked at the right interval, will tell you whether any of this landed. Everything else is noise until they move.

Your focus number

Enquiry response time

How many minutes pass between an enquiry arriving and a reply going out that actually answers the person.

Where from: Your phone already keeps this for you. Open your last ten enquiries wherever they came in: Instagram messages, Facebook messages, email, your website form, missed calls. Each one shows the time it arrived and the time you answered. Write down the gap for all ten. Measure to the reply that answers their question and offers them a way to book. An automatic acknowledgement is not that reply, so do not stop the clock there.

How often: Once a week, on your most recent ten enquiries. Look at the slowest of the ten rather than the average, because the slowest one is the client who went elsewhere.

Supporting number 1

Lead Nurture & Follow-Up

Out of every hundred people who enquire, how many end up paying you for something.

Where from: Use the same enquiry list you started in stage one. Count how many enquiries you received last month. Then go through those same people and count how many have since had an appointment. Divide the second number by the first and multiply by a hundred. Use last month rather than this month, because people who enquired this week have not had time to decide yet.

How often: Once a month, always looking at the month before last month. Doing it any sooner makes your conversion rate look worse than it is.

Supporting number 2

Booking Process

What share of your appointments the client booked themselves, without a single message passing between you first.

Where from: If you use a booking system, open its reports and look for a split between bookings the client made online and bookings you typed in yourself. Most systems show this somewhere in reports or statistics. If yours does not, keep a tally for a fortnight: make a mark every time you enter a booking by hand, and count the total bookings over the same fortnight.

How often: Once a month. If you are tallying by hand instead, do a fortnight of it once a quarter rather than all year.

A scoreboard worth keeping

Five numbers, written down every Monday for the week just gone. Two minutes, and it is the whole measurement system: a spreadsheet nobody fills in is worth less than a notebook that gets used.

If a number hasn't moved in six weeks

Go back to the priority behind it rather than adding another one on top.

The detail

Stage-by-stage analysis

The rest of this report is reference, not plan. All eight stages are written up over the following pages, whether they need work or not, so you can look any one of them up when you come to it.

What to actually do over the next three months is the 90-day focus you have just read: Enquiry response time, and the priorities underneath it. If the two ever seem to disagree, follow the 90-day focus.

How each stage is laid out

- The score, and what it means in practice
- What is working, so you keep doing it
- What is leaking, named rather than hinted at
- What to do about it, in order
- The one number that tells you it is working, where to find it and how often to look
- Tools worth considering, and the thing worth building properly

Stage 1

Lead Sources & Discovery

70
/100

Needs work

You're visible, but you're leaning on fewer channels than you should be. Broadening discovery is the difference between hoping for enquiries and expecting them.

What's working

- New clients reach you through 3 different routes, so no single platform can switch your enquiries off overnight.
- 31 Google reviews gives new clients the social proof they need before they'll enquire.
- Your website works on a phone and makes booking obvious, so interest converts while it's hot.

Gaps identified

- Your Google profile exists but isn't working hard - it's listed rather than competing.
- You don't reliably appear when local people search for what you offer, so ready-to-book demand goes elsewhere.

Recommendations

01 · QUICK WIN

Complete every field on your profile: services with prices, 10+ recent photos, opening hours, a booking link, and the Q&A section answering your five most common questions.

Impact: A complete profile typically doubles profile views and puts you in the local map pack for the services you want most.

02 · QUICK WIN

Search your main service plus your town in a private browser window. Note who ranks above you, then match them on reviews, photos and service detail in your profile.

Impact: Puts you in front of people already looking to book, at zero cost per enquiry.

Lead Sources & Discovery

How you'll know it's working

Track the following data: every enquiry you receive, where each one came from, and whether that person went on to book.

Where to get it

Start a simple list. A spreadsheet or a notebook both work. Every time somebody contacts you, add one line with three things: today's date, how they found you (Google, Instagram, a referral, a passer-by), and later, whether they booked. For the Google side of it, sign in to your Google Business Profile, open the Performance tab, and you will see how many people rang you, asked for directions, or clicked through to your website that month.

How often to check

Add each enquiry to the list the day it arrives. On the first of each month, add up the previous month's total and see which source brought you the most paying clients.

Tools worth considering

- Google Business Profile (free - the highest-return hour you'll spend)
- A booking-first website page for each core service
- Local directory listings for your area and the work you do

WORTH CONSIDERING AS A PROJECT

A booking-first page for each service you sell, with your Google Business Profile claimed, filled in properly and pointing at it.

If you'd like help setting it up, email jemina@tulivodigital.com.

Stage 2

Lead Response

28
/100

Critical gap

Enquiries are waiting hours or longer for a reply. This is almost certainly the most expensive gap in your journey: you're paying for attention and then losing it in the window that matters most.

Gaps identified

- Same-day replies mean most enquiries sit unanswered for hours, by which point many have booked elsewhere.
- Nothing happens automatically when someone enquires, so every enquiry waits for you to be free.
- Checking between clients means replies land in unpredictable bursts, and anything arriving while you're on a long job goes cold.

Recommendations

01 · QUICK WIN

Put a chatbot on every channel that answers price, availability and what's involved, and offers a booking link, so the enquiry is dealt with in seconds instead of being queued for later.

Impact: Turns a same-day business into a five-minute business without adding hours to your week.

02 · QUICK WIN

Switch on instant replies on Instagram and Facebook, and an automatic confirmation email on your website form. Include your prices and a booking link.

Impact: Every enquiry gets acknowledged in seconds, which stops people messaging three other businesses while they wait.

03 · QUICK WIN

Add an instant auto-response so the gap between clients isn't the thing your enquiries depend on.

Impact: Consistent response times without checking your phone mid-job.

Lead Response

How you'll know it's working

Track the following data: how many minutes pass between an enquiry arriving and a reply going out that actually answers the person.

Where to get it

Your phone already keeps this for you. Open your last ten enquiries wherever they came in: Instagram messages, Facebook messages, email, your website form, missed calls. Each one shows the time it arrived and the time you answered. Write down the gap for all ten. Measure to the reply that answers their question and offers them a way to book. An automatic acknowledgement is not that reply, so do not stop the clock there.

How often to check

Once a week, on your most recent ten enquiries. Look at the slowest of the ten rather than the average, because the slowest one is the client who went elsewhere.

Tools worth considering

- A chatbot on your website, Instagram and Facebook that answers price and availability on the spot and hands over a booking link
- An instant auto-reply on every channel, if a chatbot is further than you want to go right now
- A shared inbox that pulls every channel into one place, so no enquiry is sitting unseen on one phone
- Three saved replies covering the questions you are asked most

WORTH CONSIDERING AS A PROJECT

A chatbot across your website, Instagram and Facebook that answers price and availability questions on its own and books people straight into your diary, with a shared inbox behind it so nothing sits unread.

If you'd like help setting it up, email jemina@tulivodigital.com.

Stage 3

Lead Nurture & Follow-Up

46
/100

Critical gap

Once someone doesn't book immediately, nothing happens. You're effectively paying to generate enquiries and then discarding the ones who weren't ready that day.

What's working

- You do chase enquiries, which already puts you ahead of most.

Gaps identified

- One or two touches stops just before the point where most undecided enquiries actually book.
- There's nothing keeping you in mind between the enquiry and the decision, so you're competing against whoever messaged them last.
- Your offer changes depending on the conversation, so there's no consistent reason to book today rather than someday.

Recommendations

01 · PROJECT

Automate the first three follow-ups so they go out whether or not you have capacity that week, and keep your manual touch for the ones who reply.

Impact: Removes the 'I meant to message them' loss without adding to your workload.

02 · QUICK WIN

Extend your sequence to five touches across two weeks, varying the angle each time - helpful, reassuring, then time-bound.

Impact: Captures the slower decision-makers without any extra enquiry cost.

03 · PROJECT

Write a five-email nurture sequence once, automate it, and let it run for every new enquiry.

Impact: Turns a single reply into two weeks of presence - for one afternoon of work.

Lead Nurture & Follow-Up

How you'll know it's working

Track the following data: out of every hundred people who enquire, how many end up paying you for something.

Where to get it

Use the same enquiry list you started in stage one. Count how many enquiries you received last month. Then go through those same people and count how many have since had an appointment. Divide the second number by the first and multiply by a hundred. Use last month rather than this month, because people who enquired this week have not had time to decide yet.

How often to check

Once a month, always looking at the month before last month. Doing it any sooner makes your conversion rate look worse than it is.

Tools worth considering

- A three-touch follow-up sequence (day 1, day 3, day 7)
- Email and SMS automation triggered by an unconverted enquiry
- A time-limited incentive for first-time bookings

WORTH CONSIDERING AS A PROJECT

An automated follow-up sequence, by email and text, that runs itself for every enquiry who did not book on the first reply.

If you'd like help setting it up, email jemina@tulivodigital.com.

Stage 4

Booking Process

67
/100

Needs work

Clients can book, but there's friction in the way - steps, waiting, or back-and-forth that costs you the ones who were ready.

What's working

- Clients book themselves, so nothing waits on you and no enquiry is lost to timing.
- A guide price gives people enough to decide with, which keeps bookings moving.

Gaps identified

- Three or four steps is workable, but each one loses a few people who were ready.
- Quotes take a couple of days, by which point people have usually heard back from someone quicker.
- Only some services or times can be booked independently, so parts of your diary still depend on you being awake.

Recommendations

01 · QUICK WIN

Cut any field you don't need at the point of booking. Collect the rest afterwards, on the confirmation.

Impact: Fewer abandoned bookings, especially on mobile.

02 · QUICK WIN

Build one quote template with your standard pricing and inclusions, so a quote is an hour's work rather than an evening's.

Impact: Same-day quotes, which is often the whole reason one business wins a job over another.

03 · QUICK WIN

Open every bookable service to online booking, even if you cap the number of slots you release.

Impact: Captures bookings made in the evening, which is when most clients make personal appointments.

Booking Process

How you'll know it's working

Track the following data: what share of your appointments the client booked themselves, without a single message passing between you first.

Where to get it

If you use a booking system, open its reports and look for a split between bookings the client made online and bookings you typed in yourself. Most systems show this somewhere in reports or statistics. If yours does not, keep a tally for a fortnight: make a mark every time you enter a booking by hand, and count the total bookings over the same fortnight.

How often to check

Once a month. If you are tallying by hand instead, do a fortnight of it once a quarter rather than all year.

Tools worth considering

- 24/7 online booking linked from every profile and page
- Deposits taken at the point of booking
- A single booking link used everywhere, so there's one route in

WORTH CONSIDERING AS A PROJECT

Online booking that works at three in the morning, linked from every profile you have, taking a deposit at the point of booking.

If you'd like help setting it up, email jemina@tulivodigital.com.

Stage 5

Confirmation & Pre-Appointment

57 /100

Needs work

The basics are covered, but the pre-appointment experience is doing less work than it could - leaving clients to fill the gaps themselves.

What's working

- Bookings are confirmed automatically by email.
- You do prepare clients before they arrive.

Gaps identified

- Paperwork on arrival eats into the time they are paying for, and starts the visit with admin.
- Expectations are set inconsistently, so some clients arrive confident and others arrive unsure.
- Clients aren't fully confident about what's coming, and uncertainty is a common reason first appointments get cancelled.

Recommendations

01 · QUICK WIN

Add an SMS confirmation alongside the email - texts are opened far more reliably than email.

Impact: Fewer 'did my booking go through?' messages, and fewer forgotten appointments.

02 · QUICK WIN

Automate the message you already send so it goes out 48 hours before every appointment.

Impact: Same experience for every client, none of the admin.

03 · PROJECT

Move your forms online, linked from the confirmation, and make completing them a condition of the appointment.

Impact: Gives you back several minutes per client and a cleaner, more professional first impression.

Confirmation & Pre-Appointment

How you'll know it's working

Track the following data: what share of first-time bookings actually turn up, and how many of those people completed whatever you asked them for beforehand.

Where to get it

In your booking system, filter last month down to new clients only. Count how many were booked. Then count how many of those are marked as attended. If you ask people to fill in a form or answer questions before they come, count how many arrived with it already done.

How often to check

Once a month.

Tools worth considering

- Automated confirmation by email and SMS at the moment of booking
- A 'what to expect' message sent 48 hours before
- Any forms or details you need, collected before arrival

WORTH CONSIDERING AS A PROJECT

An automatic confirmation the moment someone books, a 'what to expect' message before the day, and any forms you need collected in advance.

If you'd like help setting it up, email jemina@tulivodigital.com.

Stage 6

Reminders & No-Show Prevention

56
/100

Needs work

Reminders exist but aren't tight enough. Every missed appointment here is revenue you'd already earned and then lost.

What's working

- Automated SMS reminders reach clients reliably.
- You do follow up on missed appointments.

Gaps identified

- A single reminder leaves a long silent gap between booking and appointment.
- A 14% no-show rate means roughly one in 7 booked appointments earns nothing.
- An unenforced policy is the same as no policy, but it costs you the goodwill of the clients who do turn up on time.

Recommendations

01 · QUICK WIN

Add an email reminder alongside the SMS so the detail - address, preparation, policy - is there too.

Impact: Catches the clients who don't read texts and reduces late arrivals.

02 · QUICK WIN

Send two reminders: 48 hours before (long enough to rebook rather than cancel) and 24 hours before.

Impact: The 48-hour reminder converts would-be no-shows into reschedules, which keeps the revenue.

03 · QUICK WIN

Combine three things: a deposit at booking, two automated reminders, and a policy you actually enforce.

Impact: Halving a 14% no-show rate is the equivalent of adding 7% more bookings - without a single new enquiry.

Reminders & No-Show Prevention

How you'll know it's working

Track the following data: what share of booked appointments were missed completely, or cancelled so late that you could not sell the time to anybody else.

Where to get it

Mark it in the diary the moment it happens. Most booking systems have a no-show button, and once you use it every time, the system will work the rate out for you. Treat a late cancellation as a no-show whenever you could not fill the slot. At the end of the month, divide the missed appointments by the total appointments booked and multiply by a hundred.

How often to check

Mark each one on the day it happens, while you remember. Work out the percentage once a month.

Tools worth considering

- Automated SMS and email reminders at 48 hours and 24 hours
- A clearly stated cancellation policy shown at booking
- An automatic message the same day someone misses an appointment

> Automatic reminders at forty-eight and twenty-four hours, a cancellation policy shown at the point of booking, and a message that goes out the same day somebody misses.
> If you'd like help setting it up, email jemina@tulivodigital.com.

Stage 7

Reviews & Reputation

41
/100

Critical gap

Your reviews don't reflect the quality of your work. Delighted clients are leaving without ever being asked, and new enquirers are judging you on a handful of old reviews.

What's working

- You do ask for reviews personally, which usually gets a warm response.

Gaps identified

- Few clients act on your review request, which usually means the ask arrives too late or takes too many steps.
- Most reviews go unanswered, which makes an otherwise glowing profile look neglected.
- Competitors have more reviews than you, so you're losing clients at the comparison stage - before they ever contact you.

Recommendations

01 · QUICK WIN

Automate the same message a few hours after each appointment, while the experience is still fresh.

Impact: Turns an occasional ask into a steady stream of new reviews.

02 · QUICK WIN

Send the request the same day, keep it to two sentences, and link straight to the review box.

Impact: Reviews per client typically rise sharply once the ask is immediate and one-click.

03 · QUICK WIN

Reply to every review - two warm sentences is plenty, and mention the service by name.

Impact: Improves how your profile reads to new clients and supports local search visibility.

Reviews & Reputation

How you'll know it's working

Track the following data: how many Google reviews you have altogether, how many of those arrived this month, and your average star rating.

Where to get it

Search your own business name on Google, or sign in to your Google Business Profile and open the Reviews tab. Write the three numbers down. Then search for the two businesses you most often lose work to and write down the same three for each of them. Your review count only means something sitting next to theirs.

How often to check

Once a month, on roughly the same date each time, so the new-reviews number covers the same length of time.

Tools worth considering

- An automatic review request sent a few hours after each appointment
- A direct Google review link saved as a short URL or QR code
- A monthly slot for replying to every review you've received

WORTH CONSIDERING AS A PROJECT

An automatic review request after every appointment, pointing at a one-tap Google review link.

If you'd like help setting it up, email jemina@tulivodigital.com.

Stage 8

Retention & Re-engagement

46
/100

Critical gap

You're refilling your diary from scratch every month. Fixing retention is usually the fastest route to higher income without more marketing, more hours or more enquiries.

What's working

- You follow up after appointments, which keeps the relationship warm.

Gaps identified

- Only 45% of your clients are repeat, so most of your income depends on constantly finding new people.
- Clients who drift away are never contacted, so a growing list of people who liked your work is going unused.
- Referrals happen by accident rather than because you've made them easy and rewarding.

Recommendations

01 · QUICK WIN

Ask for the next booking before they leave, as well as sending the follow-up.

Impact: In-room rebooking typically converts several times better than any message sent later.

02 · PROJECT

Prompt every client to rebook before they leave, and set up a re-engagement message for anyone who hasn't been back in 10 weeks.

Impact: Lifting repeat business from 45% to 65% would meaningfully raise your income without a single new enquiry.

03 · QUICK WIN

Export clients who haven't visited in 10+ weeks and send a short, warm message with a rebooking link. Then automate it.

Impact: This is usually the quickest available win - the clients already know and trust you.

Retention & Re-engagement

How you'll know it's working

Track the following data: what share of your appointments are taken by somebody who has been to you before, and what share of clients leave with their next appointment already booked.

Where to get it

For the first number, your booking system almost certainly separates new clients from returning ones. Look for a client report, or a customer list with a first-visit date on it. For the second number, count it by hand for a fortnight: every time a client leaves, mark whether they walked out with a date in the diary. That second number moves fastest, because it is a habit rather than a system.

How often to check

The repeat rate once a month. The rebooking tally every fortnight, but only while you are actively working on it.

Tools worth considering

- The next booking asked for before the client leaves
- An automated 'we've missed you' sequence at 8-12 weeks
- A simple referral reward for existing clients

WORTH CONSIDERING AS A PROJECT

An automatic 'we have missed you' sequence for clients who have not been back, and a referral reward for the ones who do return.

If you'd like help setting it up, email jemina@tulivodigital.com.

Next steps

Three ways to close these gaps

Everything in this report is one 90-day cycle: Enquiry response time as the focus, with the priorities that move it. That is exactly how the LEAP sprint runs. You can run it yourself - the real question is how much of it you want to carry alone.

Option 1

Run it yourself

Included

The whole cycle is written out for you to work through in order. Be warned that it is a fair amount of work: three months of building, testing and following up around an already full diary, and the parts you're least sure about are usually the ones that slip.

Option 2

Your top priority, built for you

From £950

We take the gap that's costing you most and build the fix properly, so it runs without you remembering to do it. Any quick wins that sit alongside it are included in the build.

Option 3

LEAP - 90-Day Sprint

From £2,500 a month

The same cycle, built with you across ninety days: your focus KPI, the aligned priorities, fortnightly sessions, and the work shared rather than left to your evenings. Your number gets looked at every two weeks, which is usually what separates a plan that happens from one that doesn't.

Book a 15-minute call

We'll walk through your three priorities and what to fix first.

Your score today is 51/100, and your focus KPI is Enquiry response time. Re-run this diagnostic in ninety days: when that number has moved and held, the next cycle takes on Repeat client rate.

About

Tulivo Digital

Jemina Semakula helps service business owners fix the journey between "I'm interested" and "I've booked again". Most of them don't have a marketing problem - they have a journey problem: enquiries that go unanswered, follow-ups that never happen, and clients who simply drift away.

The work is practical: response systems, booking that doesn't lose people, reminders that protect your diary, review engines and retention sequences - built into the business, not handed over as a document.

What we do

- Customer journey diagnostics and implementation
- Automation and CRM builds for clinics, studios and salons
- Websites and booking journeys designed to convert
- Reputation, retention and referral systems
